

Radio and television stations in the U.S. should increase the number of hours given to local issues, particularly by giving free 5-minutes of air time to qualified candidates running for office. This would give the public more understanding of where they stand instead of 30 seconds commercials which distort the facts and where they stand and where their opponents stand.